

PAMELA ROLLINS

Atlanta

Ms. Rollins is a noted philanthropist with a keen interest in education. She has been significantly involved with The Lovett School, Berry College, and Emory University, among other educational institutions. The Rollins School of Health at Emory is among the world's most important schools of health and is attached to the Center for Disease Control. Her experience will assist The National Monuments Foundation in creating a superior teaching facility. Ms. Rollins also worked to save the historic Fox Theatre in Atlanta, Georgia.
